

Nobarun is a loving husband in his mid-40's, who works full time at the East Scarborough Storefront. Although he is married, he has no children. His passion is in the field of social services, in which he has three degrees, from George Brown College, Ryerson University, and Shahjalal University of Science and Technology. In addition, Nobarun has 12 years of experience working in Social Services.

While he enjoys his work at the Storefront, the highlight of his day is always getting to go home and spend time with his wife, Priya. His work would be a lot more interesting – and less tedious – if it wasn't for the fact that the Storefront is often underfunded and understaffed. He and his colleagues just don't have the time to get the necessary software and systems in place for him to do his job a lot more efficiently.

At the Storefront he holds the position of Programs and Services Ambassador. He spends his days booking and confirming event times for Storefront's forty clients. Currently, Nobarun does this one-by-one, using email, post-it notes, and a very poorly made free software system that is installed on his computer.

Nobarun is not very strong when it comes to dealing with technology, so having to wrestle with an outdated and poorly created program adds a lot of unneeded stress to his workday. He and his colleagues dream of the day they can get a new system in place that will allow them to easily book event times for their clients. Not only would this make their day less stressful, but it would also give them more time to focus on other, more important, tasks at the Storefront.
